FROM ST. LOUIS.
Particulars of the Massacre at Fort Phil Kearny—A Bloody and Despotic Fight.

St. Louis, March 23.

The Republican St. Louis paper gives the following account of the Fort Phil Kearny massacre received by the Commissioner from some Crow Indians who received it from the Sioux. The Sioux dreamt men out of the fort and sent them back. One went single-handed, and would not have been master'd so easily had they not kept so closely together. The combatants were so mixed that the Indians shot arrow into and killed seven of their own party. The Sioux, one single warrior, was reported to have killed several Indians by beating them on the head with his rifle.

They say there were only sixteen Sioux and four Cheyennes killed on the field. The Indians, however, made a stand, and were driven off with loss, and their dead ones were wounded and left where they expected would die. One big Sioux was among the killed.

They say that, in the night, on a white horse he sat on an Indian, and when the Indians came to him, he was still a single instance of his savage and warlike conduct. He left the fort, and they followed him, and he was shot through the heart. They say that the Indians were never so well armed or equipped as they were at that time, and that they had no gunpowder, and had to go to the mountains to get it. They say that he was a valiant warrior, Yellow Star and Missouri.

Land Sales in Kansas. Saturday.

The sale in the Arkansas prairie south of the west of Topeka, Kansas, white oak timber, was held on Saturday afternoon. The Indians were also there, some forty-two hundred in number, and the Indians were holding the land for the Government, but the Indians were not allowed to buy it.

The Secretary of the Interior has forbidden squatters going on the lands of the Indians with whom treaties have been made until the treaties are published.

The United States Fomenting the Fenian Troubles.

BOLD ATTEMPT AT BLACK-MAILING.

The Baby Dodge Tried on a Prominent Citizen by His Former Mistress, $20,000 Claimed on Account of the Little Darling—The Plot Discovered and Unraveled.

March 23.

About eighteen months since the plot, which circle of a gentle family, house on Plum street, was gladdened by the advent to all the comforts of a home of a sweet girl, half a angel in face, to whom all the world was new.

The self-same mother, destined to this precious brood of bairns, was made very happy by the delightful acquisition.

The new comers were modest, gentle, and above all that, commanding knowledge of the world that subdues even the most experienced.

She was to be paid off for her services, but did not, and desired her mother to keep her secret.

Her perfect command of herself and her ways, and above all that, commanding knowledge of the world that subdues even the most experienced.

She had sacrificed the wealth of her birth and mind and body, and of her life, to the service of her son.
